But a list of the most hacked passwords published today by the National Cyber Security Center (NCSC) really puts the entire Internet population to shame. 23,2 million of us are still using "123456" in 2019? Internet, let's get together, join hands and promote better. The NCSC analyzed the 100.000 passwords at the top of the "Global Password Risk List": the passwords most commonly accessed by hackers in data breaches and used to obtain protected information. And yes, on top © "123456" followed by "123456789", which occurred 7,7 million times in the data breaches analyzed. Then it was "darling", used three,8 million times, followed by "password" with 3,6 million occurrences. In fifth place was "11111", used three,1 million times. At least "password" is © just in fourth place, I guess? Names, musicians, fictional characters and Premier League football teams as well © are common sources of password inspiration, according to the NCSC. The most commonly used name? "Ashley" with 432.276 uses, followed by "Michael", "Daniel", "Jessica", and "Charlie". Superman, Naruto, Tigger, Pokemon and Batman covered the list of "fictitious characters" while blinking 182, 50-cent notes, Eminem, Metallica and Slipknot inspired their fair share of passwords. Regarding football related passwords, "Liverpool", "Chelsea", "Arsenal", "Manutd", and "Everton" appeared more frequently. NCSC UK CyberSurvey also © m discovered that 37% of respondents did not always use a "strong and separate password" for their main e mail account, while 24 percent did not always use a pin or password on their smartphone or tablet. Only 15 percent of the interviewees said they knew how to protect themselves from "harmful activity" on line, while 42 percent anticipated having money stolen from them online until © 2021. O being stolen also was the most common common concern users, with 52 percent of respondents saying that they think about it "a lot" when they are online. 51 percent thought "a lot" about protecting your privacy, with 33 percent thinking about it sometimes; 38 percent often cared about protecting their friends and family, and 34 percent thought about it at times. 23.0th percent thought "a lot" about avoiding embarrassment, and 19 percent were very concerned about losing photos. The most obvious defensive move? Creating a stronger password. Dr. Ian Levy, director so © CNSC technique, said in a statement: "The re-use of passwords © an important risk that can be avoided- no one © m should protect sensitive data with something that can be guessed, like your first name, local football team or favorite band. Using hard passwords to guess at © a strong first step and we recommend combining three random but memorable words. Be creative and use memorable words for you, so that people can imagine your password,"he added. Next time they ask you to change a password? Just resist the desire to pay homage to your dog.
