But for a satisfying part, the film works its magic largely by sending, sometimes with a winch, sometimes with a hard nudge, some of the stereotypes that have long been the profitable stock of this company in trade. It is a sweet heretic red, characterized by a script that dissolves only in the kilo, some agile if too shy direction and a strong cast led by aAmy Adams. Like Giselle, a princess of the world who falls on Earth (spring)Square), Mrs. Adams shows an irresistible presence of the screen and a happy physical comedy, with a gesture performance and an emotional register alternating to remember the crazy genius of Carole Lombard and Lucille Ball. Mrs. Adams not only brings her cartoonish character to life: fills the pale cheeks of Giselle with blood and feeling, transforming a dangerously cute gimmick into a recognizable, very attractive human confusion of emotion and chrynolin. Once at a time he begins with the Animated Giselle, a pastel creation with a pointed chin and trilling voice, chatting with his friends of hairy and feathered wood. Even if you are not washing the front steps in rags and rags, Giselle was clearly conceived, more thematically than visually, along the same lines of classic Disney heroines such as Snow White and Cinderella. She is pretty, she is perverse, she is flat (well, not entirely), and when she sings on her only true love, it is not long before she emerges on horseback, responding to her call with a Stephen Schwartz and Alan Menken refracting her. Hello, hello, it's out at the chapel that would go if not for his evil stepmother and witchcraft. One thing quickly leads to another until Giselle knocks down a well and lands in New York, his figure suddenly drawn flesh. There, in the midst of the hustle and burning, finds refuge with one guarded father, Robert (Patrick Dempsey), and his daughter without mother, Morgan (Rachel Covey). Melodrama presents itself, mostly and unfairly because of another woman (Idina Menzel), but the director Kevin Lima keeps the tone light and playful while also escaping some heights of dizzy with two musical numbers, one a rousing, complexly choreographered singing and dancing in Central Park with what seems the entire Broadway dance body, the other a brilliantly surrealistic number with Giselleyou can never look at a water bug the same way. Patrick. Patrick.and Mrs. Adams. Credit... Barry Wetcher/Walt Disney Pictures Somehow the film never recovers from the anarchist joys of this particular musical number, which is so bizarre and grotesquely funny — and executed straight, without knowing smirks — which threatens to send the story out of the tracks. Part of the pleasure of this issue comes from the bad thrill of watching a beloved movie, near the sacred — in this case, “Snow White and the Seven Nani,” Disney first sublime animated feature — skillfully turned down and out. The old Warner Brothers entertainers used to take the target of rollicking to Disney on occasion, but it's something else to watch Disney send Disney, as it was, and do it with such a subdule, breezy irreverence. It is “Snow White” as remade by John Waters. It would be too much to expect Disney to completely dismantle its mythologies, thus freeing young hearts and female minds from the curse of Prince Charming, so it is not surprising that “incantated” trips to the end. The wind disappoints, as well as Queen Narissa of Susan Sarandon, who enters a bile puff as if dressed for a fetish ball. The queen arrives blessedly late at a party that lasts a long time, partly because of Prince Edward (an excellent James Marsden), a crafted fly in the ointment (the equally stellar Timothy Spall) and a chipmunk generated by the computer called Pip (voiced by Mr. Lima and Jeff Bennett). I will gladly tell you about Pip with the close call with the crucifixion, but I do not want to scare the children. “Enchanted” is rated PG (additive orientation suggested). Pigeon and rats and water bugs, oh mine. ENCHANTEDSi opens today at national level. Rotter and Gregory Perler; music by Alan Menken,songs by Mr. Menken and Stephen Schwartz; producer, Stuartproduced by Barry Josephson and Barry Sonnenfeld; released by Walt Disney Pictures. Running time: 1 hour 47 minutes. CON: Amy Adams (Giselle), Patrick Dempsey (Robert Phillip), James Marsden (Prince Edward), Timothy Spall (Nathaniel), Idina Menzel (Nancy Tremaine), Rachel Covey (Morgan Phillip), Susan Sarandon (Narissa) and Kevin Lima and Jeff Bennett (Pip). Amy Adams is a lovely princess in "Enchanted". I'm not surprised Amy Adams is lovely. He won my heart in "Junebug" (2005), where he told his husband without clues: "God loves you just as you are, but he loves you too much to stay like this. "You should have seen "Junebug" by now, which means that you will not be surprised how fresh and winning Amy Adams is in "Enchanted", where her role depends absolutely on lovability effortlessly. She is so lovely, in fact, she begins her life as an animated princess in a Disney-style world. Birds, flowers, chips and cockroaches love it and make its offerings. Look, if you could use the rough things in the world, you'd have a workforce. The princess is called Giselle, she has a beautiful singing voice, and even if she resists singing "One day my Prince Will Come", I think she is always singing to herself. One day his prince comes. This is Prince Edward (James Marsden), and it is love at first sight, and there are wedding bells in the air before the evil Queen Narissa (Susan Sarandon) puts kibosh on romanticism banning Giselle to a place as far away as possible from this magical kingdom. That would be Times Square. It is so far away, in fact, that the film passes from animation to real life, and remains there. But the animated prologue does a good job to set the stage, so that we understand the basic rules of what will essentially be a live-action story that plays from Disney animation rules. What results is a award-winning musical comedy that jumps slightly and sprightly from hope reliefs toof holes ofIf you know what I mean. I'm not sure. However, the Edwardian prince follows it to New York, along with his nathaniel servant (timothy spall in full jeeves sail) and his chipmunk. but do not run to the conclusion that giselle and edward find love in gotham, because there is the complication of robert (patrick dempsey,) a beautiful single father who meets. is bringing a daughter named morgan (rachel covey) and morgan, of course, likes her on the spot, when she ends up living with them as a homeless waif from an unimaginable place. not so cozy is nancy (idina menzel,) that already fills the girl's slot in the life of robert. She's pretty, but can she hold her position against a movie princess? not in a world in class, so romance and adventure play in ways that would be quite familiar in an animated comedy, but seem daring in the real world. First we get animation based on reality (beowulf) and now reality based on animation. the film has a sound background in the animation of disney, starting with the film director kevin lima (tarzan, "a goofy)" and the music of alan menken and texts of stephen schwartz, who composed songs for the soundtracks of the littlehontas disney and "the hunchback of notre dame." Most importantly, it has a disney will to allow fantasy in life, so new york seems to acquire a new book of games. We know, for example, that there are insects in manhattan. millions of them, in a city where the garbage left during the night on the sidewalk must look like an endless buffet. But when you recruit roaches to help her clean the robert bathtub. Well, I was gonna say, you, you're never gonna think of roaches the same way again, but you will. "joe's apartment" (1996), which has oato 5,000 real roaches, and of which I wrote: "that depresses me, but not as much as the news that none of them was damaged during the" Anyway, the scene of the rogue is soon over, and the plot begins, much helped by the evil queen of Sarandon, whoHis son Edward's spectator who marries the unworthy Giselle. I'm not sure that Robert and Morgan fully understand where Giselle comes from, but they respond to magic in her, and so do we. we.
