Fashion design sketches male

Fashion design is an exciting career for creative people and people who have a passion for fashion, clothing and accessories. Monthly salaries for fashion designers vary widely, based on employer, experience, location and talent. Fashion designers search for inspiration to sketch, cut and sew fabrics into the next big trend in clothing. Designers might work for a clothing company or design firm, or might work independently and start their own company. According to the Fashion Designer Salary Data website, the average salary range for most fashion designers is between $50,000 and $80,000 a year, which equates to $4,167 and $6,667 a month. Most fashion designers earn about $65,000 annually, or $5,417 per month. Some designers earn considerably more, especially those who own their own successful fashion design company and design clothes for wealthy people and celebrities. They can easily make a few million dollars each year, or hundreds of thousands a month. On the other end of the spectrum, entry-level designers or designers who have not had much success might earn $30,000 or less each year, or less than $2,500 a month. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), the mean annual salary for fashion designers in 2009 was $74,410 a year, or about $6,200 a month. The median salary was lower, at $64,260 a year, or $5,355 a month. The lowest paid 10 percent of fashion designers earned $32,320 a year or less, which equals less than $2,693 a month. The highest paid 10 percent earned more than $130,900 a year, or more than $10,908 a month. Fashion designer salaries vary by industry, according to the BLS. For example, designers who work in the apparel, piece goods and notions merchant wholesalers earned an annual average salary of $73,150 in 2009, or $6,095 a month. Designers in the performing arts industry earned less than any other industry listed by the BLS, at $53,270 a year, or $4,439 a month. The motion picture and video industry paid fashion designers more than any other industry listed by the BLS, with an average salary of $92,850, or $7,737 a month. Designers in the specialized design services industry earned $80,720 a year, or $6,726 a month, while designers in the durable goods merchant wholesalers industry earned $79,380, or $6,615 a month. Location also plays a role in a fashion designer's salary. For example, according to the BLS, fashion designers who lived and worked in New Hampshire in 2009 were the highest-paid designers in the country, with an average salary of $85,460, or $7,121 a month. Maine designers were the next highest paid on the BLS list, with an average salary of $81,540 a year, or $6,795 a month. California designers came in third, with an average salary of $81,490, or $6,790 a month. Surprisingly, designers in New York state were the fifth-highest paid, with an average salary of $79,800, or $6,650 a month. New York City is considered one of the fashion hot spots of the world, so the competition among aspiring designers living and working in New York seems to drive average salaries down. By Tom Gresham Updated March 07, 2019 The jobs of fashion designer and costume designer each involve apparel design. The main difference between costume and fashion design is the audience served. Fashion designers create commercial pieces that will be sold to and worn by the general public, while costume designers are specialists who provide compelling pieces for actors and actresses to wear in plays, television shows and movies, among other productions. Fashion designers typically work for retailers or apparel companies, but some are self-employed and contribute designs to multiple clients. Fashion designers design a range of types of apparel, including clothing, footwear and accessories. Some designers specialize in a particular type of apparel, such as handbags, or a particular market, such as children's or luxury wear. Fashion designers tend to create collections of pieces that are introduced in stores seasonally. First, they create a concept design for each piece in the collection and select fabrics and trims. Then they work with other team members to create the design samples that are used in manufacturing. Some designers also oversee production of seasonal runway shows that debut their designs. Costume designers may work for a theater company or television show, but many are freelancers who take jobs on a production-by-production basis. They work with a production's creative team to settle on a theme for the costumes, then create designs that reflect each character's traits and other components of the production while incorporating the theme. The designs must take into account the production budget for costume materials and labor. Both fashion designers and costume designers create unique and original designs, but each has constraints. Fashion designers must pay attention to the demands of the retail market and come up with designs that will sell. Costume designers often must replicate a specific historical period or create functional designs, such as for ballet dancers or ice skaters. Also, costume designers often must work with existing pieces purchased or rented for a production rather than original designs. An academic background in the field is not necessary for a career in either fashion design or costume design. However, a college education specific to the field can provide a head start in both fashion design and costume design, improving prospects with potential employers. Neither field requires any licenses or certification. In both career paths, designers frequently will serve an apprentice period, working under more experienced designers to help them realize their designs. The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistic reports the median salary for fashion designers was $67,420 in 2017. This is the wage at which half of designers earned more and half earned less. Designers working in the motion picture and video industries had a median salary of $75,470, while those in apparel manufacturing earned $66,400. Fashion design employment in the U.S. is projected to grow by only 3 percent between 2016 and 2026 due to international apparel production. Projections for costume designers aren’t available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.
