Locals of the Singer factory. Have you ever wondered where your vintage Singer was made?In vintage heydey, Singer started machines by hundreds of thousands at multiple factories around the world.Some factories produced complete machines, others produced components.Therefore, it takes a little detective work to determine exactly where your vintage machine was born...Singer’s most prolific factories were based in Elizabeth, New Jersey (USA), Anderson, South Carolina (USA), Bridgeport, Connecticut (USA), Clydebank, Scotland (Great Britain) and St. Jean-sur-Richelieu, Quebec (Canada). Most of the classic Singer machines came from one of these factories. Machines made in Canada and Great Britain are often labelled as such on the inside of the engine column.The markings on the engine or foot control can be misleading because they may be a later complement from a different factory. Serial numbers can also provide clues about the source factory.If your machine has a serial number that starts with 2 alpha characters, those alphas may be unique to the original factory.For example, if your serial number starts with NA, NB or NC, then it is almost certain that it was manufactured in Anderson, South Carolina, USA.
