Students with planting and gardening experience can make text-to-self connections © since they reflect the Hold prediction for life to grow. Text-to-world connections will also learn more than how to live in an urban center. Children who live in apartments or other areas where gardening is less trivial can connect the story to their neighborhood landscapes and what it might be like to have one of their garden. Life in advance Disalvo was born and raised in Brooklyn, New York, where he felt at the age of eight that "I already have an artist". [1] a "reluctant reader", he attended fontbonne fontbonne Academy for Girls in Brooklyn, and studied art at the School of Visual Arts in New York. Before illustrating children's books, DiSalvo has worked as an artist for Hallmark Cards. In 1982, he met the then Senior Editor Jane Feder [2] Harper and Row, now HarperCollins. After 22 years of Harper and Row, Feder opened his own eponymous agency representing illustrators of children's books, and DiSalvo was the first customer to her. The DiSalvo work is the illustrator of over 50 books for children. The career she began in 1980 with the publication of this new baby [3] (1980). He went on to illustrate The Bear under the bed (EP Dutton, 1980), the first day of school [4] (1981), Best Friends [5] (1983), The Half birthday party [6] (1984), those Terwilliger terrible Twins [7] (Raintree Heinemann-Raintree, 1984), and Sam Ellis Island [8] (1985). [9] DiSalvo has shown for some of the more noteworthy authors in children's literature, including Beverly Cleary: Two dog biscuits [10] (1986), The Real hole [11] (1986), the walk- Up Growing [12] (1987), and Thingamajigs Janet [13] (), Mary Pope Osborne: Mo to the Rescue [14] (1988) and Mo and his friends [15] (dial, 1989) Amy Hest: The Mommy exchange [16] (1988), the [17] best-ever Good-Bye party (1989), the Go-Between [18] (1992), Jean Fritz: George WashingtonÃ ¢ s Mother [19] (1992) and He wants women to vote, Lizzie Stanton? [20] (1995), Patricia Reilly Giff: Friends and Amigos Series (1995), Jane OA Connor: Kate Skates (1996), Nina, Nina Ballerina (1996), Nina, Nina Star Ballerina (1997), and Nina, Nina Copycat Ballerina (2000). Other works illustration include: Saturday belongs to Sara [21] (Bradbury Press, 1988), What did the mother do before [22] (Albert Whitman & Co., 1988), Why © crying baby [23] (Albert Whitman & Co?, 1989), The knight Christmas [24] (1993), Olivia and The Real live domestic [25] (1995), true Blue [26] (1996), The most courageous cat, a true story of Scarlet [27] (1997), now we can have a wedding [28] (1998), The American Wei [29] (Albert Whitman & Co., 1998), If I was president [30] (Albert Whitman & Co., 1999), It ¨ real Hannukah Yet? [31] (2000), Our eight nights of Hanukkah [32] (2000), and a doll called Dora Anna. [33] (2002). [9] In the summer of 2010, GrandmaÃ ¢ s Smile [34] (A Neal Porter Book / Roaring Brook Press / Macmillan, 2010) was released. DiSalvo and author Randy Siegel, the then editor of Parade (magazine), has been awarded the 2010 Gold and Platinum Award Oppenheimer [35] along with critical acclaim including a review of Booklist, "mixed media illustrations capture the experience of DiSalvo the child with emotional and gratifying warmth attention to detail. " [36] [37] Inspired by his experience as a volunteer at him Chips Soup Kitchen [38] in Brooklyn, wrote and illustrated the Uncle Willie and The Soup Kitchen [39] (1991). The Uncle Willie and the Soup Kitchen has been awarded Children 's Book of the Year 1991 / The Child Study Association of America Committee Book, 1991 and Remarkable National Council Children's Book for the Social Studies / Children's Book Council of United. The book was featured on the television series Reading Rainbow highly regarded children in 1996, and in 2000, was adapted into a children's Puttin 'on the Ritz Theater in Oaklyn, New Jersey. [40] The success of the Willie and The Soup Kitchen uncle was the first with the theme of "Helping Neighborhoods, one book at a time." This series aims to empower young readers to make a difference in their communities through volunteerism, building community gardens, cleaning local parks, shopping locally, and even how to become involved with Habitat for Humanity International. DiSalvo followed with Green City [41] (1994), the story of a girl who helps transform a city lot into a garden city. In 2009, the illustrations in Green have been reconstructed in the form of a children's playground and offers Arboretum's Storybook Playhouse competition and botanical garden. [42] [43] The book was also transformed into a musical and produced in Berkeley, California, from Theater company [44] In addition to its numerous awards, the title was also present on the reading of the rainbow and has been printed in the following editions: Scholastic Spanish, Scott Forsman School, Hbj School, Macmillan McGraw-Hill and Silver Burdett Ginn School. In (2019) HarperCollins issued a 25th anniversary of the green city by honoring the book as a modern classic day in children's literature. Disalvo wrote and illustrated by going to grandmother's house [45] (1998) and a dog like Jack [46] (2000), a story of a boy who celebrates the life of his dog and pains the loss of him when he moves away . The third book of Disalvo in the series of neighborhood helper is inspired by the beloved, Mr. John Johnson, by Haddon Heights, NJ. Owner of the friendly market of John. Grandpa's Corner Store [47] (2001), a story of a child who brings together a community to save their local grocery store. A castle on Viola Street [48] (2001) taught young readers how to get involved and change neighborhoods through the habitat for international humanity, and spaghetti park [49] (2002) encourages them to make a difference in them Community cleaning local parks. [40] The first disallow novel for young readers, the sloppy copy slipup [50] (2006) teaches the third through the fifth elementary how to write creatively through the eyes of an elementary school boy who has just got another zero on His assignment of kid. This critically acclaimed and awarded book should have a sequel, even for vacation. [40] Disalvo traveled to school all over the world with his artist / author presentation, which is for students K up to 8, and focuses on the art of writing rough drafts and what is really needed to be a Working artist.
