But when I saw his ad, I was fascinated. I have never heard of the book, but I have a lot of respect for most of the main cast, so I thought it would not have been a real disaster if they had been involved. As for Suck, I was completely amazed by the first episode. I don't know why, but I found this show completely and absolutely fascinating, due to music and cinematography. All the subjects involved from top to bottom have left the park. I have never experienced that lifestyle (i.e. mom, dad and school policy), but one of my customers who looks at the show and lives in the same neighborhood said it used him when his children were at school. As for the perspective, I usually work by watching TV, not "watching", only background noise. Not only did I stop working to look at him, but I spent the last minutes to jogging in slowing down to completely absorb what had happened. I can't praise the show more! You will recognize the scene I'm talking about when you see it.
