HEPATIC ENCEPHALOPATHY

Dr. Reena
Residant Ward 6

CIRRHOSIS
LIFESTYLE CHANGES

LOW SODIUM DIET

Can be used when patient has developed volume overload and/or ascites.

Keep in mind that it is a difficult lifestyle change. Limit sodium to 2000 mg daily. If strictly adhered to can effectively mitigate ascites.

HIGH PROTEIN DIET

Cirrhosis is a catabolic condition and patients will lose muscle mass and potentially become sarcopenic without adequate protein intake.

Dr Matherly advises his patients to consume least 1 gm/kg/day. Do not put on low protein diet regardless of recurrent hepatic encephalopathy

RESUMO

Em pacientes com insuficiência renal, a encefalopatia é um problema comum que pode ser provocado pela uremia, deficiência de tiamina, diálise, rejeição de transplante, hipertensão, desequilíbrios hidroeletrolíticos e toxicidades medicamentosas. Em geral a encefalopatia se apresenta como um complexo de sintomas que progride de uma leve obnubilação sensitiva até delírio e coma. Esta revisão discute questões importantes com relação aos mecanismos de base da fisiopatologia da encefalopatia urêmica. A fisiopatologia da encefalopatia urêmica é até hoje incerta, mas postula-se o envolvimento de diversos fatores; trata-se de um processo complexo e provavelmente multifatorial. Distúrbios hormonais, estresse oxidativo, acúmulo de metabólitos, desequilíbrio entre os neurotransmissores excitatórios e inibitórios, e distúrbio do metabolismo intermediário foram identificados como fatores contribuintes. A despeito do progresso continuado na terapêutica, a maior parte das complicações neurológicas da uremia, como a encefalopatia urêmica, não respondem plenamente à diálise e muitas delas são desencadeadas ou agravadas pela diálise ou transplante renal. Por outro lado, estudos prévios demonstraram que a terapia antioxidante pode ser utilizada como terapia coadjuvante para o tratamento destas complicações neurológicas.

INTRODUÇÃO

Como conseqüência dos numerosos avanços no diagnóstico e terapêutica precoce de diversas doenças, a terapia intensiva desenvolveu-se como uma sub-especialidade em todas as disciplinas clínicas envolvidas no cuidado de doenças com risco à vida. Na neurologia, isto leva a um aumento nas unidades de terapia intensiva neurológicas que lidam com uma ampla gama de doenças vasculares, infecciosas, imunológicas, metabólicas e doenças malignas não apenas como doenças primárias dos sistemas nervosos central e periférico e muscular mas também como afecções secundárias provocadas por outras doenças de órgãos ou sistemas.[1]

A insuficiência renal aguda (IRA) é uma entidade clínica comum e crítica que afeta cerca de 5% a 7% de todos os pacientes hospitalizados.[2,3] Ela se associa com diversos problemas, terapias e procedimentos clínicos. Apesar dos avanços no tratamento clínico, a IRA ainda acarreta uma importante morbidade e uma taxa de mortalidade de 20% a 70%. Infelizmente, isto não melhorou nos últimos anos em razão de uma população mais enferma e mais velha.[4]

Reduction of plasma ammonia remains the central therapeutic strategy, but there is a need for newer novel therapies. We discuss current evidence supporting the use of interventions for both the general management of chronic HE and that ... 2020-3-5 · Avoiding Protein Restriction. Although old literature supported the use of protein-restricted diets in patients with HE [15,16,17], we review how this has been debunked (Table 2).Cardoba et al. (2004), in the first randomized controlled trail conducted on the hospitalized patients with overt hepatic encephalopathy (OHE), not only established the safety of normal ... Hepatic Diet Restrictions. The liver performs many vital functions in the body including detoxification, metabolization of nutrients and creation of blood-clotting factors. Though the liver has a great capacity to repair itself, certain conditions such as cirrhosis or hepatitis can cause such severe damage that this organ can no longer function ... 2012-4-3 · Abstract. Hepatic encephalopathy (HE) is a severe neuropsychiatric complication occurring both in acute and chronic liver failure. Among patients with cirrhosis, HE is most frequent in patients with advanced liver disease.
